ADDRESS.

WITH a heart enlivened by the most grateful sensations, the Editor of the New-York Weekly Magazine, acknowledges the many obligations he is under to the public, for their extensive patronage and support: success, equal to his most sanguine expectations, has justified his early hopes and confidence in the public; and the distinguished marks of favour bestowed on the work, have added to the gratifications of a mind emulous to please and ambitious to be useful: nor has any effort been unemployed to raise the work in merit to the standard of its liberal patronage, and to render it still more deserving of universal esteem: if in the minds of any he has at times fallen short of that perfection which is his darling object, he hopes—he anticipates—he trusts—that their goodness of heart will have induced them to attribute casual defects, not to the want of exertion, not to any neglect on his part, but to that inexperience necessarily belonging to youth, arrived but at that stage when ripening into man, the reins of reason hang yet loosely and difficult to manage in his hands: the experience of a year, must however have wrought a change, it must have contributed to strengthen the judgment, to mature the understanding, to form the taste: from these considerations, he fondly hopes, the next volume will be more perfect—possessing more beauties and fewer defects.

To those who have favoured the editor with ingenious original productions, he is particularly grateful; to their number and excellence he must attribute a considerable share of that celebrity which the work has obtained: but while exceedingly obligated to all, and confidently relying on their further kindness, he should deem himself insensible were he to neglect an especial acknowledgment for the articles produced by the charming pen of the indefatigable ANNA: the unanimous applause with which her effusions have been received, warrant us in ranking her with some of the most celebrated writers of Europe.

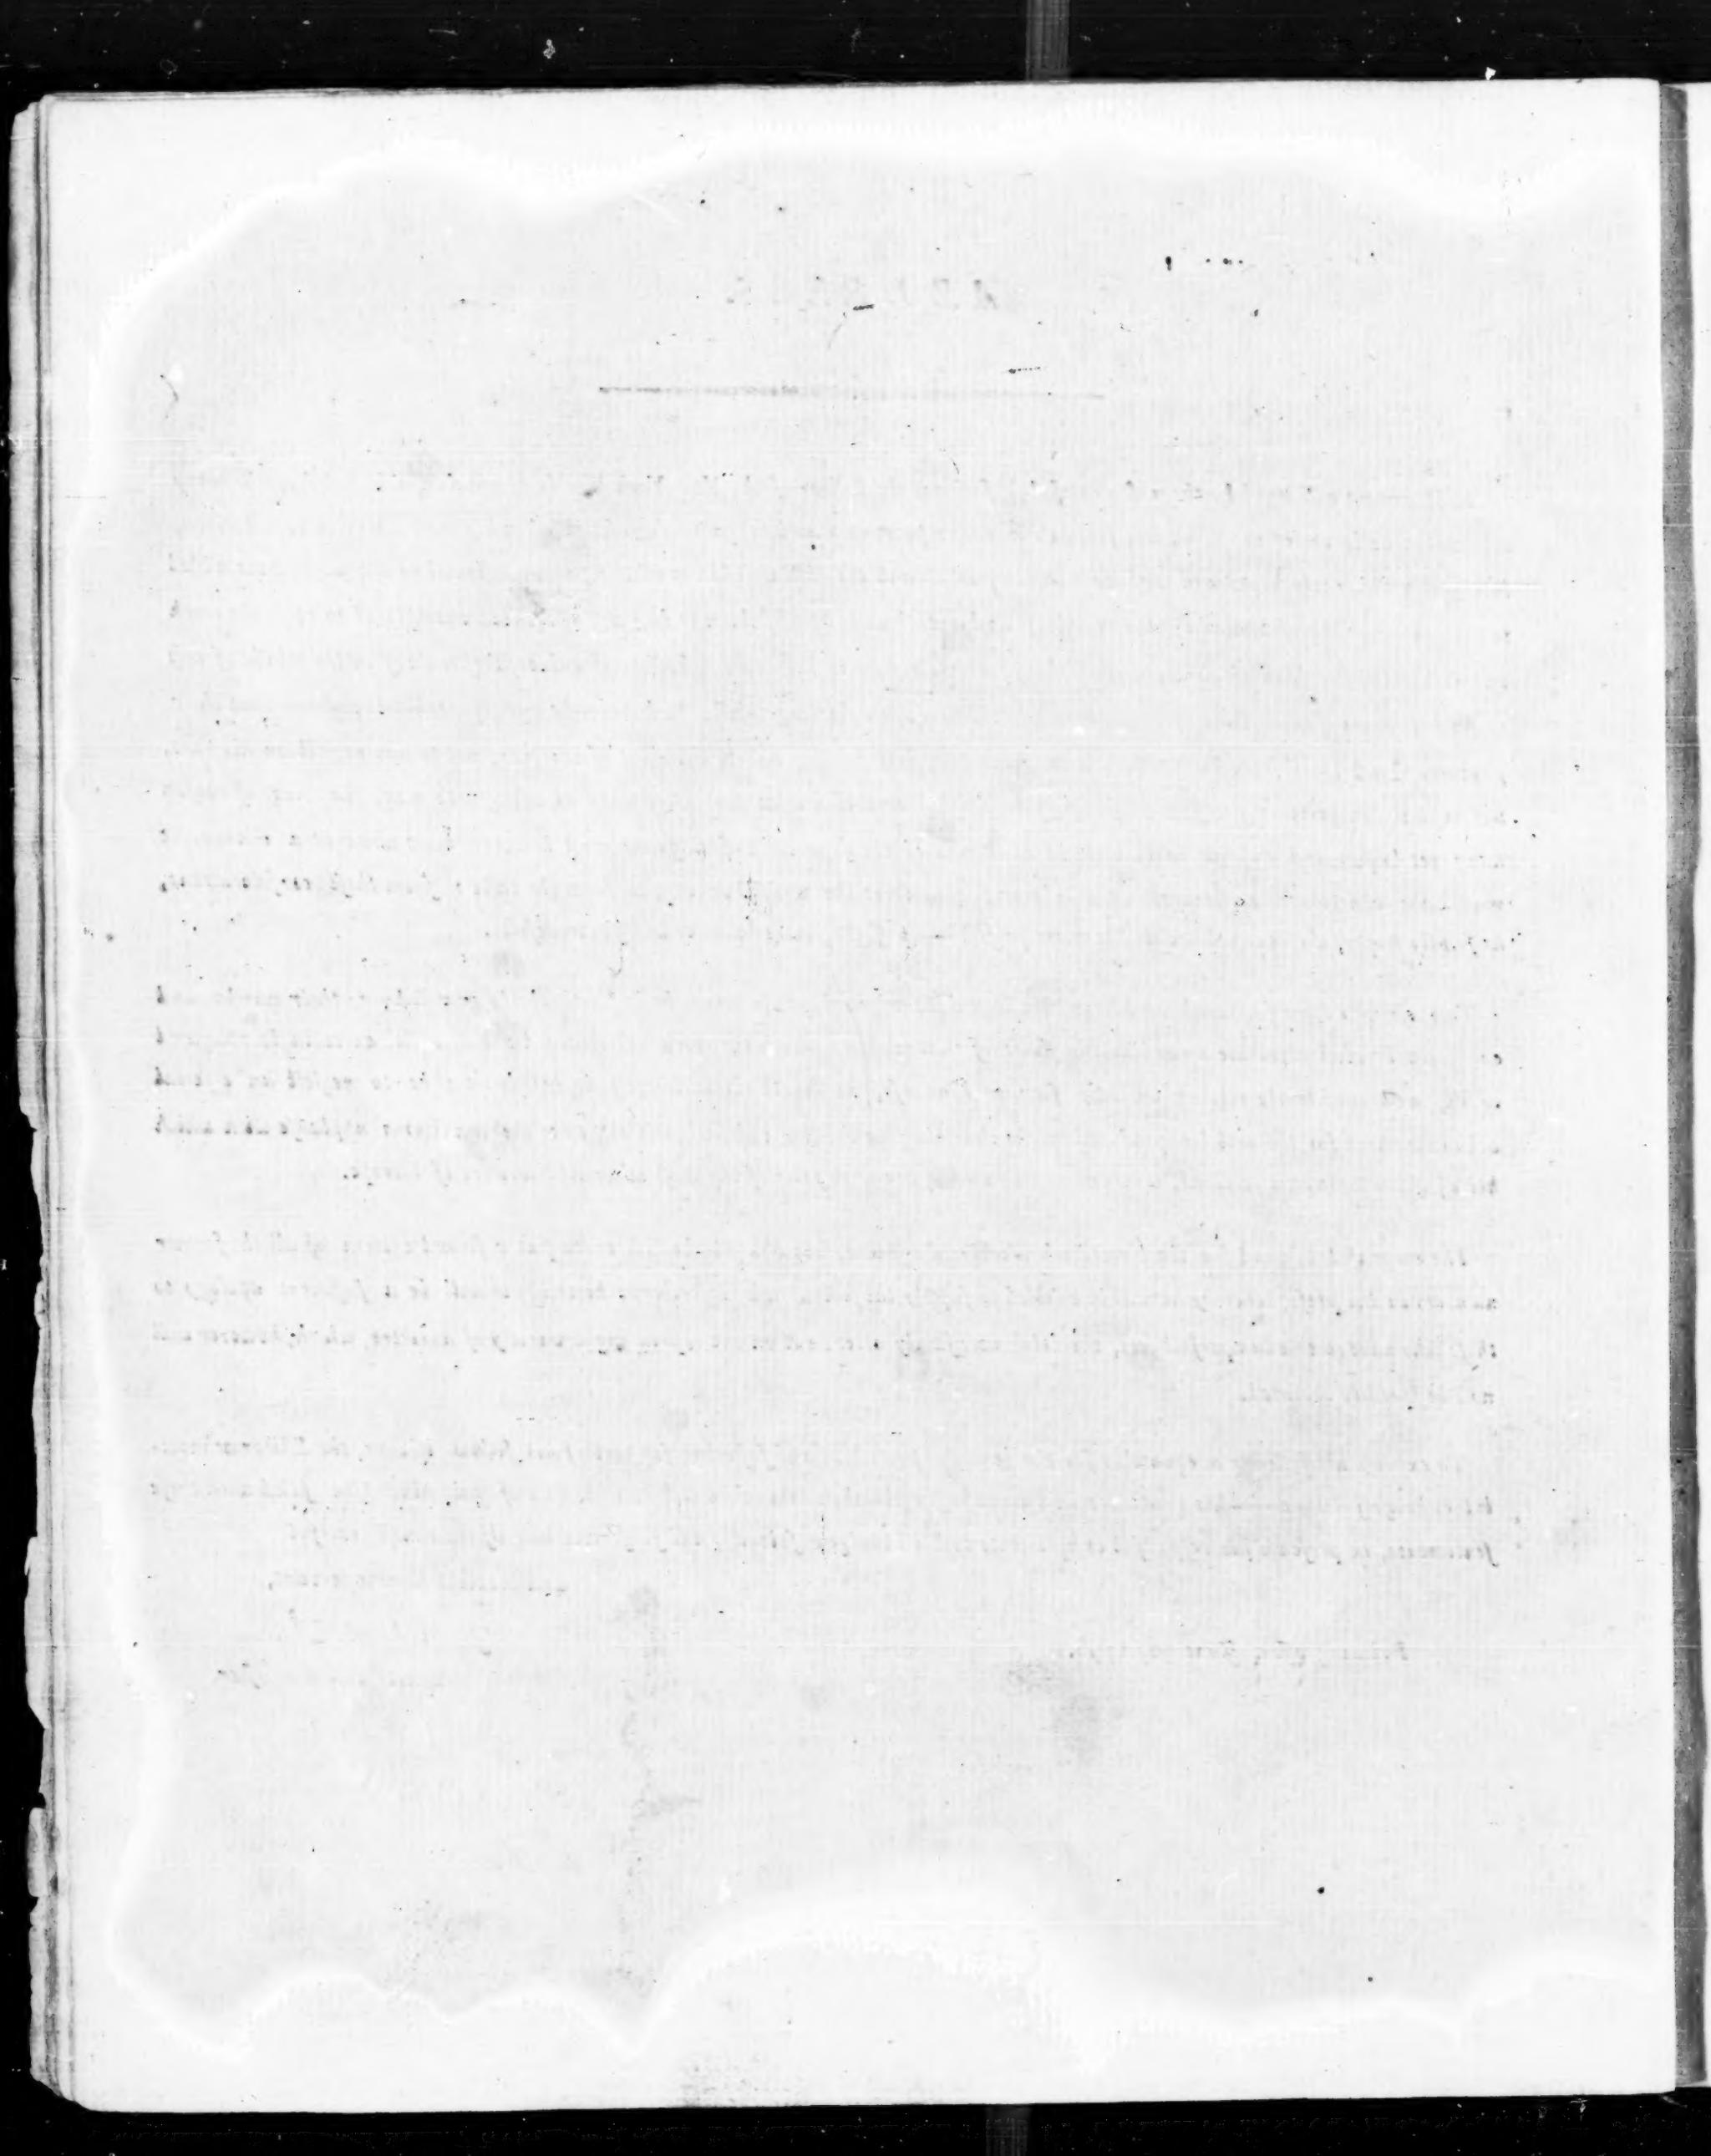

The increased demand for the New-York Weekly Magazine, has obliged the Editor to put a second edition of all the former numbers in the press, whereby he will be enabled to supply the several new subscribers; he trusts it will be a sufficient apology to those who have received imperfect sets, the delay necessarily attendant on the reprinting a variety of numbers, which, however will now be speedily obviated.

To express his feelings adequately, for the generous protection and fostering support of his fellow-citizens, the Editor acknowledges himself unable—his gratitude will unceasingly stimulate him to merit a continuance of their kindness: filled with these sentiments, he presents his respectful compliments to his indulgent friends, and subscribes himself their most grateful and obedient humble servant,

JOHN BULL,
Editor and Publisher.
